Did You Carry the Flag Today, Charley? is a cute book, but I'm not totally sure who the audience is. It's not simple enough for the youngest set, but the main character is five-years-old, so that makes it less appealing to the older set. Regardless, it's very cute. All the children in the Appalachian Mountains know that the highest honor at Little School is being chosen to "carry the flag" and lead the line to the school bus. It's the award given each day to the child who has been most helpful. When Charley Cornett begins school no one expects him to win the award.
