Marsupials are any members of the mammalian infraclass Marsupialia. All extant marsupials are endemic to Australasia and the Americas. A distinctive characteristic common to these species is that most of the young are carried in a pouch. Marsupial Mammals: Marsupials are the group of mammals commonly thought of as pouched mammals (like the wallaby and kangaroo at left). They give live birth, but they do not have long gestation times like placental mammals. What's that you say? Oh yes, it's true — marsupials, including the most popular one, the kangaroo, are equipped with a total of three vaginas. Ooh yeah, lemme know what you find. There's also some cool stuff about the mums being able to produce different types of milk to control the development of the different youngsters, but I didn't ...
